This park was developed under a policy of using former military bases for parks. Development was carried out considering improvement to the living environment for residents, the need for exercise facilities, and function as an evacuation center in case of disaster.

A full range of exercise facilities for jogging, baseball, tennis, soccer, and more are provided. Those help the park in its role as a place for family sports with forest, hills, and water surrounded by greenery. There are also a childrens playground equipment and water play area, a multi-use field forming a slope, and other facilities. The Fuchu Art Museum opened on the north side of the park in 2000, adding art appreciation to the many ways to enjoy the park such as sports and strolls through the bright green of the tree groves. Eight sculptures by notable artists are located throughout the park.
