This park stretches to the west from the dike on the Edogawa River that separates Tokyo and Chiba. With fields and sports facilities, it is a precious resource for eastern Tokyo that is lacking in green areas.

The predecessor of the park was a project to celebrate in 1940 the 2,600th year since the founding of Japan. Part of the area held an anti-aircraft battery, with the rest being agricultural land. After the war, it was restored to parkland, with part opened in 1967.
Further development will be ongoing.

Opened	July 26, 1967
Area	301,905.89 m²
Trees	Tall trees: 6,500, shrubs: 11,100
Main plants	Camphor, cherry (someiyoshino), metasequoia, tulip tree, rose of Sharon
Facilities:	Baseball field, small baseball field (also serves as athletic field), tennis courts (sports facilities can be lit up for night use), children's playground, barbeque field (28 areas, reservations required), dog run

Grassy hills and fields ●

Two grassy hills and grass fields are separated by shrubbery. As there are no tall buildings nearby, the sky seems wider, and the park has a brighter, spread-out feel.

In addition to 80 cherry trees, pines, Japanese chinquapins, Japanese pagoda trees, metasequoias, and other trees dot the grassy hills and fields. That open area is used as fields for light sports.
